

COMPUTER INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY: WEB DEVELOPMENT

"During the course of my studies at SUNY Orange, I obtained an education that far exceeded my expectations. The professors were always available before or after classes for any questions I had, and a major contributor to my career was the internship that was provided by the College."

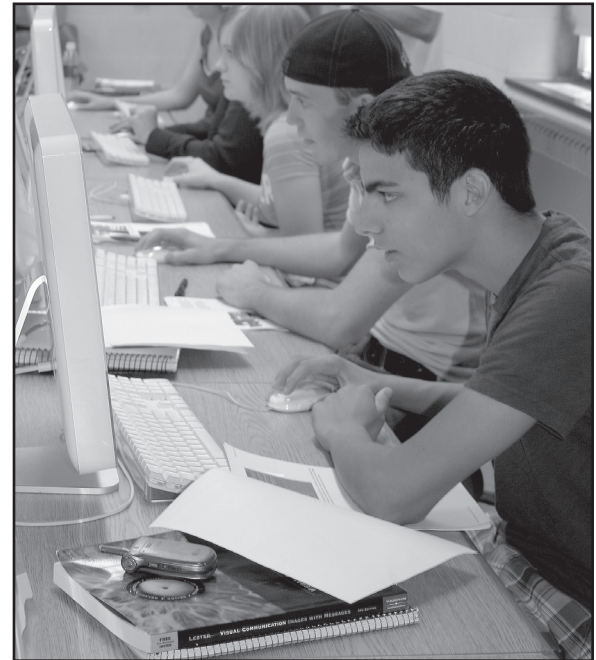

Daniel A. Cosh

Why Web Development?

To be successful in today's technological environment, nearly every business, organization, agency or school must maintain some degree of an internet presence. This has created a tremendous demand for web developers and web managers. Career opportunities exist across many fields or disciplines, including small businesses, corporations, educational institutions, medical offices, governmental agencies and nonprofit organizations. Web consultants are also in high demand. This dynamic field brings you into contact with designers, executives and consumers while utilizing the latest in hardware and software programs. Advanced degrees will make you a hot commodity in this field.

Why Web Development at SUNY Orange?

The College's computer information technology (CIT) web development degree program prepares graduates to succeed as a web developer or web manager in a variety of fields. Access to state-of-the-art technology, coupled with internships and courses teaching current trends within business and the internet, will provide students with a well-rounded education. A SUNY Orange web development degree is designed for students to enter the workforce upon graduation, but the program also provides a broad-based education that prepares students for an advanced degree, if that is their educational goal.
